

ABSTRACT

A system for providing users with location specific information about where they are, social information about what other users are thinking, and navigational information about where they would like to go and how to get there is proposed. The system is comprised of a 5 mobile device, a content server, a communications link between the device and the servers, and a means of determining current location. The system is then housed in a travel sized briefcase / box.